

GARDEN GONE TO THE DOGS; CAVES OWN IT THIS WEEK

Every Nook and Corner of Big Structure Filled by Pets, Big and Little, Pretty and Otherwise.

"Hark! Hark! Hear the dogs bark. The Dog Show has come to town." You can't hear much else but the dogs barking at the Westminster Kennel Club's thirtieth annual at the Garden this week. From the smallest dogs come the loudest noises, but even the stolid Great Danes lose their dignity at times and raise their voices in gladness.

It is very reminiscent of the stormy days in the Equitable when a celebrated financier was coming his favorite reporter. Not that many of the hairy "man-of-the-worlds" are yellow, even in color. The big dogs look very much bored by the proceedings for the most part, but to the mutts it is all very real and they are the most important things in the Garden to judge from the noise that they are making about it. They believe in advertising themselves and when a big dog who could swallow them all at a mouthful swallows alone in tow of his master, all the little fellows strain madly at their chains while they yap their challenges.

Show a Success.
Some of the big dogs forget themselves at times and one greyhound makes a noise like a hoarse rooster growing every time he opens his mouth. Tell a Great Dane, who looked like he had been starred in the great Ohio River scene of an Uncle Tom's Cabin show has been slowly but surely trying to pull over his bench ever since the show opened.

The Westminster Club looks for a prosperous week following the auspicious opening on Lincoln's Birthday, when the holiday crowd flocked to the Garden early in the day, filling every bit of available space and making the management rub their hands with satisfaction. The showing of dogs is unusually good this year, all dog experts have agreed and the attendance has been in proportion.

The attendance has been as characteristically doggy as the horse show was horse. The Garden swarms with fashionably dressed women, who seemed particularly attracted to the ugliest bulldogs in the show.

"Isn't he a beauty?" exclaimed a dauntingly attired young woman in red and furs, stopping to pet one of the most repulsive-looking bull terriers in Thomas W. Lawson's exhibit. Her comment was shared by a lot of pretty girls, who admired the underdog jaws, the formidable tusks and the dissipated eyes of the bulldogs.

Features of Exhibit.
The bulls have the north gallery to themselves, with their own private judging ring and benches. On the opposite side of the gallery the small pet dogs and toy dogs have the lofty exclusiveness of wealth and position and the admiration and attendance of elderly women.

The common or Garden dogs are forced to look up at the clever dogs of Lavelle's troupe of trained animals, who do stunts on the high dive and ladder. At least they are to look up when one of the clever mutts mounts to the top of the ladder and does a neat flip-up into a net. The aristocratic dogs of old families refer to the dog who goes up the ladder as a social climber, but it reaches the net every night.

To-day is devoted to the judging of Irish and Welsh terriers by S. Van Schalk; Scotch terriers and Rosemeath terriers by W. B. Emery; Pomeranians, English toy spaniels, Yorkshire terriers, toy terriers and Griffons by E. M. Oldham; Japanese spaniels by G. M. Arnold; Chihuahuas, dachshunds and Maltese terriers by H. Lacy, and dogs by Miss A. H. Whitney. Tomorrow fox-hound packs will be the feature.
